

Olera Student Caregiver Internship — Intern Agreement

You're not signing up for a job — you're starting the work you want to do for the rest of your life, with real hands and a real person who needs you. The hard part has always been getting experience that counts. That's what we built Olera to fix: do the work, and we'll make sure it's verified, credentialed, and ready to carry into every application — and every patient — that comes after.

— Dr. Logan DuBose, MD

This agreement is between you (the Intern) and Olera. It explains how the internship works, what you commit to, and what you receive. It is the single source of truth for the internship — if you ever wonder how something works, the answer is here.

Host — the family or agency you work for; your host is your employer, not Olera.

Shift — a care session you and a host arrange.

Care Report Card — the short record you submit after each shift.

Verified Hours — report-card hours a host has confirmed.

Credential — the certificate Olera issues when you complete the internship.

1. Eligibility. You confirm you are currently enrolled — or recently graduated and planning to apply to a professional school — and that you need patient-care hours for that goal. Nothing else is required to join.

2. The fee — once. You pay $200, one time. That single fee covers as many hosts and as many terms as it takes to meet the requirements and graduate. You pay it only after you accept your first host's offer — never before a real match, and never again.

One fee, one finish line: we only succeed when you graduate, so we stay with you until you do.

3. Getting ready. Before your first shift, complete the required onboarding and training, finish an accurate profile, and upload any certifications we ask for.

You should be ready before someone's care depends on you.

4. Your hours. Submit a Care Report Card for every shift. At the end of the internship, Olera consolidates your records and your host verifies them. Your verified hours are yours to keep, even if a placement ends.

5. Your host is your employer. Your host sets your schedule, pay, and supervision. Olera does not employ you, set your wages, or direct your work. You are paid by your host — an agency through its payroll, or a family directly (Olera may help process family payments).

6. Your commitments. Be reliable, give advance notice, keep the availability you agree to, work within your training, and protect the privacy of the person you care for. Keep your profile current whenever your availability, host, or term changes, so hosts always know where you stand.

7. What you receive. Connection to hosts; verified patient-care hours; references; reviews; a letter of recommendation when a host feels you've earned it; and application support — resume, personal statement, and mock-interview help to frame your experience in its best light.

8. Your credential. When you reach 120 verified hours of quality experience — with verified reviews and letters, your training complete, and your hands-on metrics met — Olera issues your internship certificate.

Not a participation badge: proof, earned, that you can hold up in any interview.

9. What Olera is, and isn't. Olera connects, structures, and records. Olera is not your employer, a staffing agency, an insurer, or a guarantor of any outcome — hours, placement, pay, or admission. We promise the structure and the support; the work and the relationship are real, and yours.

10. After the internship. You're welcome to keep using Olera to work with families and agencies for as long as it's useful, and your application support stays with you.

11. Accepting. You accept by signing electronically when you accept your first host's offer. We record who accepted and when. If we update these terms, we'll ask you to re-acknowledge.
