

Olera Agency Host Agreement

You already know how rare a caregiver is who actually wants to be there. Olera's interns do — pre-health students building toward a clinical career, who treat every shift like it counts, because for them it does. You get reliable, screened help at no fee; the field gets the clinicians it's going to depend on. That's a trade worth making.

— Dr. Logan DuBose, MD

This agreement is between your agency (the Agency Host) and Olera. It sets out your role when you employ an Olera intern, and it is the source of truth for hosting. There is no fee to you.

- 1. What hosting is. You employ an Olera intern — a vetted pre-health student — through your agency.
- 2. Eligibility. You confirm you are a licensed or registered care agency.
- 3. You are the employer. The intern is your employee under your normal operations: payroll, onboarding, background checks, insurance, and compliance with applicable employment, labor, and care law are yours.
The cleanest, truest structure is the one where the licensed employer stays the employer.
- 4. Pay. You pay the intern through your own payroll. Olera does not process agency pay.
- 5. Liability and compliance. Because you employ the intern and run the engagement, liability, insurance, and legal compliance are entirely yours. Olera carries none and does not direct the work.
- 6. Your role in the internship. Verify your intern's hours honestly, leave a brief review after shifts, and — if your intern asks and you feel they earned it — consider writing a letter of recommendation (we provide a work summary and template) and serving as a reference.
- 7. Good faith. Honor the availability and terms you set, and treat your intern as the professional-in-training they are.
- 8. What Olera is, and isn't. Olera connects you with motivated, screened students and structures the internship. Olera is not the employer, an insurer, or a guarantor. What you get is reliable talent who want to be there — at no cost.
- 9. After the internship. If it's a good fit, you're encouraged to hire your intern on for the long term, using Olera however helps.
- 10. Accepting. You accept by signing electronically when you send an offer. We record who accepted and when; updates require re-acknowledgment.
