

Olera Employer Agreement

This agreement explains how it works to bring on an Olera student caregiver, and what you agree to. It is written for you, the employer. You are either a family caring for a loved one at home, or a care agency. Most of this is the same for both. Where it is different, we say so. There is no fee to bring on a student.

What this is

You bring on an Olera student caregiver, a pre-health student who wants real caregiving experience, to help with care. You are their employer. Olera connects you with the student, runs the program, and keeps the records. Olera is not the employer and is not involved in the care itself. More on that below.

How it works, step by step

1. You decide to bring on a student.

- If you are an agency: you confirm you are a licensed or registered care agency.
- If you are a family: you are bringing on a student caregiver in your own home to help care for a family member.

2. You find a student and send an offer. You browse students near you and can talk with them first. When you find one you want, you send an offer. When you send the offer, you sign this agreement and agree to what is in it.

3. You are the employer. The student works for you. You set the schedule, you pay them, and you supervise the work.

- If you are an agency: you handle this through your normal operations: payroll, hiring steps, background checks, insurance, and following the laws that apply to you.
- If you are a family: you are a household employer. This is new for most families, and it has rules about pay, taxes, and insurance. It can be done simply and safely with the right steps. Olera gives you a short guide and a 30-minute call with our team, so you are not doing it alone.

4. The student works their shifts. You and the student agree on the schedule and the work. You supervise them and treat them as a professional in training. You keep to the schedule you agreed on, except in an emergency.

5. You pay the student.

- If you are an agency: you pay through your own payroll. Olera does not handle your pay.
- If you are a family: you and the student agree on pay, and you pay them directly. Olera can help you send the payment. That help does not make Olera the employer.

6. You check the student's hours and leave a review. After each shift, the student fills out a short report card with the date, the time worked, and what they did. You review it and confirm it is correct. You agree to do this honestly and on time. Your reviews help the student build a record they can use.

7. At the end, you confirm the total and consider a letter. When the student finishes their time with you, you confirm their total hours. If the student asks, and you feel they earned it, you consider writing a letter of recommendation. Olera gives you a summary of their work and a template to make it easy. You may also agree to be a reference. Whether to write a letter or be a reference is always your choice.

8. After the program. If it works out, you are welcome to keep the student on for the long term, and to keep using Olera.

Who is responsible for what

- You (the employer): employ the student, set the schedule and pay, supervise the work, and confirm the hours.
- The student: does the care, logs each shift, and keeps their profile current.
- Olera: connects you with students, runs the program, keeps the records, and (for families) helps you do this safely.

Insurance and liability

- If you are an agency: because the student is your employee, all insurance, liability, and legal duties are yours. Olera carries none.
- If you are a family: because the care happens in your home and you direct it, insurance and liability are yours. Olera carries none. The guide and the call we give you are there to help you cover this the right way.

What Olera does, and does not do

Olera does: connect you with students, run the program, keep the records, and help families do this safely.

Olera does not: employ the student, pay the student (you do), act as an insurer, or promise any outcome.

A few more things to know
