

Olera Family Host Agreement

Trusting someone to help care for the person you love is hard. Our interns are pre-health students who chose caregiving because it matters to them. They give your family attentive care, and you give them a real start. The parts that are new to you, like being an employer, we will help with.

Dr. Logan DuBose, MD

This is the agreement between you (the family host) and Olera. It explains your part when an Olera intern helps care for your family member at home. There is no fee for you.

- 1. What you do. You bring on an Olera intern, a checked pre-health student, to help care for your family member at home.
- 2. You are the employer. The care happens in your home and you direct it. That makes you the employer. You set the schedule, pay, and supervision.
- 3. We help you do this safely. Being an employer at home has rules about pay, taxes, and insurance. It can be done simply with the right steps. We give you a short guide and a 30-minute call with our team, so you are not alone.
- 4. Pay. You and the intern agree on pay. Olera may help you send the payment. That does not make Olera the employer.
- 5. Insurance and liability. You control your home and the care, so insurance and liability are yours. Olera has none. Our guide and call help you cover this the right way.
- 6. Your part in the internship. After shifts, check the intern's hours and leave a short review. If the intern asks and you feel they earned it, write a letter of recommendation. We give you a summary and a template to make it easy. You may also agree to be a reference.
- 7. Good faith. Keep to the schedule you agree on, unless there is an emergency. Treat the intern as a professional in training.
- 8. What Olera does and does not do. Olera connects you to students and runs the internship. Olera is not the employer or insurer, and promises no outcomes. You get a caring helper and our support, at no cost.
- 9. After the internship. If it works out, you can keep the caregiver long term. You can keep using Olera.
- 10. Signing. You sign by clicking accept when you send an offer. We save the date. If we change these terms, we will ask you to accept again.
