

Olera Agency Host Agreement

Good caregivers are hard to find. Our interns are pre-health students who want to be there, because the work helps their future. You get reliable help at no cost. In return, you help train the next group of clinicians.

Dr. Logan DuBose, MD

This is the agreement between your agency (the host) and Olera. It explains your part when you employ an Olera intern. There is no fee for you.

- 1. What you do. You hire an Olera intern, a checked pre-health student, to work at your agency.
- 2. Who can host. You confirm your agency is licensed or registered.
- 3. You are the employer. The intern is your employee. You handle payroll, hiring steps, background checks, insurance, and following the law. This is your normal process.
- 4. Pay. You pay the intern through your own payroll. Olera does not handle agency pay.
- 5. Insurance and liability. Because you employ the intern, all insurance, liability, and legal duties are yours. Olera has none and does not direct the work.
- 6. Your part in the internship. After shifts, check the intern's hours and leave a short review. If the intern asks and you feel they earned it, write a letter of recommendation. We give you a summary and a template to make it easy. You may also agree to be a reference.
- 7. Good faith. Keep to the schedule you set. Treat the intern as a professional in training.
- 8. What Olera does and does not do. Olera connects you to students and runs the internship. Olera is not the employer or insurer, and promises no outcomes. You get reliable help at no cost.
- 9. After the internship. If it works out, you can hire the intern long term. You can keep using Olera.
- 10. Signing. You sign by clicking accept when you send an offer. We save the date. If we change these terms, we will ask you to accept again.
