

Olera Student Caregiver Program Agreement

This agreement explains how the Olera Student Caregiver Program works and what you agree to when you join. It is written for you, the student. Please read it before you start.

What the program is

Olera matches pre-health students with local home care agencies for paid caregiving work. You get real, paid experience caring for older adults — the kind of hands-on healthcare experience that medical, nursing, PA, and other professional schools look for — plus mentorship, references, and a recommendation letter for your applications. The program is built as much for students in a gap year as for those currently enrolled.

The agency you work for is your employer. Olera makes the match and supports you along the way; Olera does not employ, pay, or train you for the role — your employer does.

How it works, step by step

1. You apply and join. You can join if you are pursuing a health career and want real patient-care experience, whether you are currently enrolled or in a gap year. When you join, you pay a one-time $50 application fee and confirm that you qualify.

The fee is non-refundable, and it is the only fee you ever pay Olera. It gives you lifetime access to the Olera job board, where local providers post caregiver openings, and it includes the application support described below.

2. You get matched and accept an offer. Olera matches you with local home care agencies looking for caregivers, and you can browse openings on the job board. You can talk with an agency before you decide. When one wants to bring you on, they make you an offer. You choose the offer you want and accept it. You are never required to accept one.

3. You get ready before your first shift. Before you start, you finish your profile and upload any documents we ask for, such as proof of certifications. Your employer provides any training you need for the role. You agree to complete these steps before your first shift. This keeps you and the people you care for safe.

4. You commit to the term and work your shifts. You commit to one academic term at a time. Your classes come first, and Olera sets that expectation with every employer up front, so they know your availability works around your course schedule. In return, you take the commitment seriously.

The agency is your employer. They set your schedule within your availability, pay you through their payroll, and supervise your work. Olera does not set your pay and does not pay you.

While you are in the program, you agree to:

- keep your availability up to date — the hours you can work outside of class — and submit it so your employer can schedule you
- be flexible and reliable within those hours, including during midterms and finals, and give early notice if your plans change
- show up on time, and only do tasks you have been trained for

- keep private what you learn about the people you care for

5. You build your record. As you work, you earn experience and reviews from the agencies you work with. When you have earned it, you can also earn references and a recommendation letter. For a letter, Olera gives your employer a short summary of your work and a simple template. You ask, and they decide.

After the program, your lifetime job-board access stays yours, and you are welcome to keep working with agencies through Olera for as long as you want.

What you get

- real, paid patient-care experience — the healthcare experience that medical, nursing, PA, and other professional schools look for
- bedside-manner experience and real stories for your personal statement, essays, and interviews
- lifetime access to the Olera job board, where local providers post caregiver openings
- reviews from the agencies you work with
- references, if an employer had a good experience with you
- a recommendation letter, if an employer feels you earned one. Olera gives them a short summary of your work and a template to make it easy. You ask, and they decide.
- mentorship, mock interviews, and help writing your letters of recommendation and personal statement from Dr. DuBose's team — included in your application fee

What Olera does, and does not do

Olera does: match you with home care agencies, give you lifetime job-board access, support you through the program, and help with your applications.

Olera does not: employ you, pay you, or train you for the role (your employer does), act as your insurer, or promise you a job, a certain amount of pay, a certain number of hours, or admission to any school.
